

James Kobacker is a world traveler with an eye for dramatic and descriptive images. He began taking photographs 20 years ago and has used his skills to capture photographs of culture, wildlife and breath-taking scenery in 45 countries thus far.

Kobacker is a National Geographic Photo Contest editor's choice photographer; having two of his images chosen to be highlighted in a recent online competition. (Please see Links)

Being motivated by the challenge and excitement of capturing unique images of new species of animals and cultural aspects of people and communities.

Kobacker is constantly updating his portfolio and equipment. Highlights of his career include: photographing endangered mountain gorillas in Uganda, capturing images of a wild cheetah in Kenya and taking pictures of glaciers and penguins in Antarctica.

Kobacker accepts requests for specific work and his photographs are available for purchase. (Please see Contact Page for more details)